This has surely been an interesting year so far: blizzards, floods and now fires – grim reminders that we might not really be in control. Financial matters, health concerns, job and family matters all creep into our consciousness and keep us from the good things that we'd like to accomplish.

Sometimes we work away on our dream projects, seemingly not making any progress. We plan, write, evaluate, explain, promote, re-assess, give up and take a chance and start again. Start again, appeal to others, beg for understanding, money and finally, a break through!

Oh the Joy! Someone agrees, understands, and believes in your dream. Someone has bought into it and set other things in motion. One step taken. Many more to come.

Don't know what I'm talking about? Just look at page 4!

SCALE HOUSE OR LINE SHACK?

In 1996, the Norbert Zirbes Family donated a scale house which had been used to weigh loads of coal at a Morton County coal mine to the Mine Camp at Buckstop Junction. Recent information indicates the building may be older than earlier thought.

The Scale House is built of full dimension lumber and it is possible it began as a "Line Shack", a Government building during the Homesteading Era of western North Dakota. When land was available for homesteading, many Line Shacks of this design were used as information centers to help settlers locate available land. These Shacks provided the settlers with a local agent so they didn't have to make the long trip to the county seat.

Scale House at Buckstop Junction today .

The large window was hinged at the top, and when open, served as a ceiling for an enclosure created when canvas side curtains were hung from the open window. On pleasant warm days with no wind (are there any?), the side curtains would not be necessary. When homesteading ended, it appears this Line Shack was moved to a coal mine north of Mandan to serve a few years as a Scale House. In the late 1930's, George and Martin Zirbes moved the building to Bismarck where it remained until 1949 when it was relocated to a farm northeast of Driscoll. It remained on the farm until being moved to the Mine Camp in 1996. A cast iron wood stove which stood in a corner was used for heating and cooking.

OUR VANISHING PRAIRIE ELEVATORS

All across our North Dakota skyline we are seeing gaps where our prairie sky-scrapers, the grain elevators once stood. Just the summer before last we lost the elevator in Mandan. Every year we hear of three or four lost to the ravages of time or weather.

These buildings once made the transportation of our North Dakota grain to the people who needed it possible. The elevators were built along the railroad and the farmers hauled their grain to them for shipping.

The Brittin elevator pictured at the right was built along the Soo Line Railroad in Burleigh County, northwest of Moffit. The town of Brittin lost the last of its residents during the Great Depression and the post office closed in 1933. The elevator still stands, but for how long?

This is not a rhetorical question. Efforts are afoot to save this building and move it to the historic town of Buckstop Junction. Our Brittin Elevator committee is being organized by Doug Alm. Thanks Doug!

Preservation North Dakota held its annual conference at Buckstop Junction May 1 and 2. You can find information at www.prairieplaces.org The Missouri Valley Historical Society would like to thank Preservation North Dakota for naming the Brittin grain elevator to their list as one of the three most endangered places for 2009 (see above). This designation will help bring needed publicity and funding and begin the process of moving the elevator to Buckstop Junction!

If you haven't renewed your membership please do so now. If we work together we can make this a great summer! Larry Strand and your Membership Committee.
